NOTORIOUS FREEBOOTERS.

Scandinavian Robbers—English Pirates.

An article on Brigandage in the last number of the Westminster Review, founded on the recent narrative of Mr. Moens experience in Italy, gives a series of curious sketches of notorious freebooters of mediæval and modern times. Two of these stories are as follows:

THE THIRTY ROVERS OF JOMSBURGH.

It is hardly possible to read some of the stories of the old sea kings of Scandinavia without feeling admiration for the splendid daring, and stoical disregard of life exhibited by those noblest and most romantic of robbers. Take the famous Norse legend of the thirty rovers of Jomsburgh, for instance, who were captured by Earl Hakon, King of Norway, about the year 924. The king had determined to cut off the heads of all his captives, and appointed Thorkell Leire, one of the most famous of the Norse Berserkers, to act as executioner. The Jomsburghmen were made to sit down before the king on a log of wood with their legs bound together by rope. Osier twigs were twisted in their hair, and a slave stood behind each to tilt up his head steadily. Soon three heads rolled to the ground before the mighty sweep of Thorkell's axe. Then turning to the rest of the captives with a mocking smile, the Norwegian chief asked them what they thought of death. Early boy, one of them, said out to be quick over the work. Thou knowest it is a question often discussed at Jomsburgh whether or not a man feels anything after losing his head. If, after my head is cut off, I throw the knife at thee, that will show that I retain some feeling, if I hit it full it will prove the contrary. Now strike. Thorkell did as he was told, but no sooner was the man's head struck off than the knife fell to the ground from his powerless grasp. Strike the blow in my face, said the next. I will sit still without flinching. Watch my eyes, to see if I wink, for the rovers of Jomsburgh know how to meet the stroke of death without betraying any emotion. He kept his promise, and received the blow without winking his eyes.

Then Sigurd, the son of Bui, the Thick, a fine young man in the flower of his age, with long fair hair in fine silk flowing in ringlets over his shoulders, thus addressed Thorkell: Let us not do this but I must pray thee not to let my hair be touched by a slave, so stained with my blood. Upon this one of Hakon's followers stepped forward and held Sigurd's head instead of the slave's, but as Thorkell's axe was whizzing through the air Sigurd twitched his head forward so swiftly that the executioner's blade was untouched, and cut off both the hand of the wretch who held him. The free Hakon was hugely delighted at this practical joke, and his son, Earl Sigurd, immediately loosed Sigurd from the rope. Thorkell however being determined not to be baulked of his prey, now rushed with uplifted axe upon Vigi Akason, brother of the captives, but the crafty sea rover threw himself on the ground, so that Thorkell fell over him and cut the rope with his axe. Being thus freed from the bonds which held him Vagi sprung up, and cut down Thorkell with his own weapon. Luck then asked Vagi whether he would accept life from his hands. Willingly, was the reply, provided thou will give it to all of us. Upon this the rope was loosened and the twelve rovers who had escaped death returned to their native rocks. This Vagi was the most unruly and fierce of the Jomsburgh men. He sought admittance to the political community when he was only twelve years old, and when their envoy, he exclaimed, Prince, I refused his application on the ground of his youth. Vagi coolly replied that he was as strong as any man of eighteen, and offered to fight the most famous of the rovers. Earl Sigurd in proof of his assertion. The challenge was accepted, and Vagi pressed his antagonist so closely with his battle axe that the chief was obliged to interfere to prevent Sigurd from being killed by the formidable boy.

THE ENGLISHMAN—LOW AND BLACK.

Low was a Londoner, and his taste for piracy was exhibited at every early age. It is said that when a boy he used to lay contributions among his companions, and that if any of them refused, a fight was the result. His first exploit was to shoot at his captain because the latter ordered him on an expedition just as Low was about to have his dinner. He then set up as a pirate, and was remarkably successful in his captures, chiefly on account of the terror he inspired. On the captured a French ship, and being in want of provisions he offered to the governor of a French port to give her up provided he would send him a supply. The provisions were sent, and Low liberated the crew, but declined to give up the vessel on the ground that there was a very stout cook on board, who, being a greasy fellow, ought to fry well. He then had the unfortunate man bound to the mast and set the ship on fire. Still more atrocious was his conduct towards the captain and crew of a Portuguese ship which he captured. Having heard that there was a large sum of money on board he searched all over the vessel but without success, upon which he ordered the crew to be put to the torture in order to make them say where the treasure was concealed. It then came out that the captain had, during the chase, hung the bag containing the money out of his cabin window, and that when the pirate came on board he had cut the rope and the bag had fallen into the sea. This put Low into such a frenzy that he immediately ordered the captain's lips to be cut off and broiled before his eyes, after which he and the crew were murdered. The cruelty of this singular ruffian did not, however, always require so much provocation. He would murder a man out of simple exuberance of spirits, and when he was in the best of humors. One thing only is recorded to his credit, he never ill treated his own countrymen. The only instance in which he fled from the pursuit of a man of war was when it was manned by English sailors, and once when he captured a frigate, of which the crew was one half English and one half Portuguese, he hanged the latter, and allowed the English to go wherever they pleased.

Teach, better known in the West Indies as Black Beard, was a grotesque villain who delighted in a sort of picturesque ruffianism that made him the admiration as well as the terror of the country in which he committed his depredations. The sobriquet by which he was known was derived from a black beard of extraordinary length which covered nearly the whole of his face, and which he used to twist into numberless small tails. While in action he had three brace of pistols slung across his shoulders and lighted matches stuck under his hat, which illuminated his dusky face and fierce eyes with an uncanny glare, and together with his bristling beard and wild gestures made up a picture that few could look upon without fear. From time to time he would land for the purpose of holding a council. On these occasions seated under a wild fig tree with his band surrounding him, he would consult them about his plans, punish those who had broken the rules of the band, and reward the bravest and most enterprising. He had a harem of fourteen wives, whom he treated with such brutality that even his crew were horror struck at his conduct. None of them, however, dared to whisper a word of remonstrance, for they knew his despotic temper, and believed him to be armed with supernatural power, which enabled him to do any thing he wished.

Those of his companions who were taken alive in his last battle used to relate how once, upon a cruise, they found they had a stranger on board, how this stranger was seen for several days among them, sometimes below, sometimes on deck, although none of the crew could say who he was, or whence he came, and how at last he disappeared in the same mysterious manner as he had come, and all of them religiously believed he was the devil.

The belief that Black Beard was in communication with the Spirit of Evil was still further strengthened by another incident which will paint the grotesque extravagance of the man.—Being one day at sea, and a little flushed with drink, 'Come,' said he, 'let us make a hell of our own, and try how long we can bear it.' He then went down with some of his men into the hold, and, after shutting down the hatches, filled several tubs with sulphur and other combustible materials, which he set on fire, thus literally involving himself and his men in fire and brimstone, after which he danced around the hold with oaths and frantic gestures, apparently not in the least affected by the choking vapor which filled the air, until his companions, fainting and nearly suffocated, compelled him to release them. His convivial humor was of a similar kind. In one of his drunken fits, while seated in his cabin at dinner, he blew out the candles, cocked the pistols, and crossing his hands, fired on each side at his companions, one of whom received a shot which maimed him for life. This story he used to tell with great glee, adding that, 'if he did not now and then kill one of his men, they would forget who he was.'"

Among continental brigands the writer gives the palm of chivalry to the Klephts, who ruled the Thessalian mountains at the time of the Turkish rule in Greece. The Spanish bandits are said to have robbed their victims with a certain amount of courtesy, while Italians are put lowest in the scale both as regards generosity and courage.

A Man Walks Eleven Miles Drawing a Wagon Weighing 520 Pounds, on a Wager.

From the Ravenna (O.) Democrat.

Quite a remarkable feat was accomplished on Thursday last by a resident of Mantua township, a feat that few men would attempt and fewer still successfully accomplish.

The party performing the feat is Caleb Hotchkiss who keeps the tavern at Mantua Corners. He is a little over thirty years old, and was a member of a New York regiment during the war. He is a man of more than ordinary muscular power, and possesses at least the usual amount of moral and physical grit.

Thursday last was a very hot day, the mercury ascending to 97 degrees in the shade, and in addition to this intense heat the atmosphere was dry and oppressive. Upon Thursday morning Hotchkiss appeared in the street, in Mantua Corners, drawing after him a one horse wagon, with a 'harness' upon it which he intended taking to a hay field near by to be loaded. Meeting a neighbor it was remarked that the easier way of drawing the wagon might be devised to which Hotchkiss in a boastful manner replied, he knew of no easier way, and would bet any man $50 he could draw the wagon to Ravenna, a distance of eleven and a quarter miles, before sundown. A little discussion was aroused by this, which resulted in a bet of $40 between Hotchkiss and M. McCarty, on the capability of the former to perform the feat.

It was then past nine o'clock and Hotchkiss at once set out upon his journey. The wagon was weighed and brought down exactly 520 pounds. Attaching a couple of straps to the whiffle tree, through which he passed his arms, Hotchkiss took up his line of march followed by McCarty in a buggy to see the thing done on the square. The affair caused sufficient comment about Mantua to call out sides bets to the amount of $300. Hotchkiss reached Shalersville—six and a fourth miles of his trip. He there took dinner and rested for an hour. Again he set forward, and by easy stages made the five miles to Ravenna reaching the Taylor House at fifteen minutes past six, while the sun was an hour and a quarter high, having accomplished his feat and won his wager. Hotchkiss pronounced himself in good condition and not excessively fatigued, but still reported himself very much heated, his blood being at fever heat. His feet were somewhat blistered but aside from this professed to suffer no material inconvenience from his day's work. In fact, for a $100 wager he proposed to turn about and draw the wagon back to Mantua before sixe o'clock the next morning. But no one offered to take the bet. Hotchkiss and McCarty took supper at the Taylor House, where the wager was given up.

The event soon become noised about the streets and a large crowd gathered at the Taylor House to congratulate the athlete on his triumph. A little after seven however McCarty took Hotchkiss in his buggy and the victor and the vanquished returned home to report the history and result of the feat.

Another Fenian Scare—A Sensation for the Canucks.

From the Toronto Globe, July 28.

Once more we are startled by the intelligence that the Province is invaded by a band of Fenian marauders. The news comes upon us like a flash of lightning. It gave no forebodings. The first invasion was preceded by news of Fenian movements throughout the United States. This invasion would appear to have been concocted with the strictest privacy and carried out with the quietness of a murderous intent.

About midnight the first intelligence of the invasion was flashed across the wires. Dr. Kempson, the Reeve of Fort Erie, who occupied such a prominent position in the late invasion, telegraphed, at that hour, to Gen. Napier at Toronto, and to the Attorney General, West, at Ottawa, that the Fenians were crossing near Fort Erie in considerable numbers.

Later still a dispatch was received stating that the Grand Trunk Company were sending engines to Fort Erie to remove the rolling stock from there as rapidly as possible.

After this messages to the military authorities came pretty rapidly across the wires, but their contents were not made known. Indeed the strictest reticence was manifested at the telegraph office, and it was with no little difficulty that we were able to obtain as much information as we did.

The news of the invasion having reached us, we at once dispatched a reporter to the Queen's Hotel where General Napier and his staff are at present staying. They all bore a quiet appearance outwardly, but the General, with his advisers, were actively engaged and messages were being repeatedly sent to the telegraph office.

We had expected that before going to press the volunteers in town would have been called out. But at the hour of writing (a quarter to four) the alarm bells had not been rung. Nor was it possible to learn at the General's headquarters what his intentions were with regard to the disposition of troops. At this time, however, the General appeared to be taking matters quietly, having probably given orders to the forces already at the front.

If any large force has crossed the Niagara river now, the consequences of the act must lie at the feet of the American Congress, which has taken this scum of all iniquities under its protection, and by its dastardly conduct galvanized the dying body of Fenianism into a state of activity.

Escape of Du Chaillu.

M. Du Chaillu, a French traveler, somewhat noted for the discussion he provoked some years since in the English papers, in regard to the gorilla, (several English savans having expressed doubts of the existence of such an animal,) has, it appears, met with a rough reception at the hands of the natives during his recent visit to the interior of Africa to prove the truth of his statements. The following extract of a letter received in Boston from Rev. William Walker, dated Gaboon, West Africa, May 23d, will be read with interest:

M. Du Chaillu's retreat was in this wise. The people of a town to which he was approaching made such hostile demonstrations that he ordered two of his men to fire blank cartridges in the air and turn them back, and then they would parley with them. Unfortunately, one of the men fired a shot, not in the air, but so low as to kill a man and a woman. After that the people would listen to nothing, but wanted to kill the whole party. He retreated, leaving all his baggage for them, except his guns and ammunition. They were pursued for some days and Du Chaillu was wounded twice with poisoned arrows.—They had to fight the people before them as well as behind, and he reached the coast with a losing a man. This was after he had been confined five months in one place with small pox and difficulties connected with it. His trials and endurance must have been extreme.

The Season at Newport.

Newport is filling up rapidly with a wealthier class of guests than has been seen there for several seasons, and among them are a great many new faces. The women are among the most beautiful ever seen, and possess an air of style and distinction which is better than mere beauty. Moreover, their dress, the mass of hair, real and false, the picturesque little hats perched on the top of their heads, the flash of their jewels, the grace of their motions, the changing variety of their light and fanciful costumes all give an impression of beauty which one can stop to critically examine, and which only some cynical old brute of a bachelor would care to analyze, for what is the beauty, after all, which appeals to the senses, but a mere effect, which, like a ghost, is all right so long as it is accepted and unquestioned, but disappears as soon as we stop to dissect and examine it.

In the cool of the afternoon, when summer is over, and before the galeties of the evening commence, is the favorite time for driving, and the display of splendid private vehicles, superb horses, and elegant toilettes upon these occasions, was never before equaled, even in this brilliant centre of fashion and folly.

Private evening parties are quite the ton, and excursions are daily occurring, some on the water, and others off to the road, or to private grounds where all the glories of picnicing are substantially realized.

Women Defended.

Carl Benson indignantly repels, in the New York Evening Post, the charge of the Round Table, that intoxication is a prevalent vice among the American ladies. Carl says: "I have seen as much of our good society as any man, I don't care who he is, that ever wrote for the Round Table, and throughout an experience of twenty years, comprising some fastish sets, I can positively affirm, without reservation, that I have never seen a lady, old or young, affected by liquor. It is the very last malpractice that can be justly charged upon American women. Cultivate assiduously the more rapid portion of our female society, and you will find somethad habits and a great deal of bad manners, but drunkenness, never. No, the Round Table's accusation is either a stupendous fiction, or an equally stupendous hallucination. Our ladies are much more temperate in the use of wine than those of England, France or Germany, very few of them can be induced to touch distilled liquors, the taste of which is positively disagreeable to them; they even dilute beverages, the moderate use of which would be beneficial to them, such as sweet cider and good beer."

The Corporal, Fitzgerald, who did the shooting, deserted his post to go with the party, although he should have refused them permission to pass out. He bears a very bad character in the matter.

OVER A MILLION DOLLARS SAVED!

Gentlemen:—"I had a negro man worth $1,200 who took cold from a bad bath in the leg, and was useless for over a year. I had used everything I could hear of without benefit, until I tried the Mexican Mustang Liniment. It soon effected a permanent cure."
J. L. DOWNING.

Montgomery, Ala., June 17, 1859.

"I take pleasure in recommending the Mexican Mustang Liniment as a valuable and indispensable article for Sprains, Sores, Scratches or Galls on Horses. Our men have used it for Burns, Bruises, Sores, Rheumatism, &c., and all say it acts like magic."
J. W. HEWITT,
Foreman for American, Wells, Fargo's and Harnden's Express

"The sprain of my daughter's ankle, occasioned while skating last winter, was entirely cured in one week, after she had commenced using your celebrated Mustang Liniment ED. SEELY."

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 1, 1865

It is an admitted fact that the Mexican Mustang Liniment performs more cures in shorter time, on man and beast, than any article ever discovered. Families, livery men and planters should always have it on hand.—Quick and sure it certainly is. All genuine is wrapped in steel plate engraving, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private U S Stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co, over the top.

An effort has been made to counterfeit it with a cheap stone plate label. Look sharp!

It is the most delightful Hair Dressing.
It eradicates scurf and dandruff.
It keeps the head cool and clean.
It makes the hair rich, soft and glossy.
It prevents hair turning gray and falling off.
It restores hair upon prematurely bald heads.

This is just what Lyon's Kathairon will do. It is pretty—it is cheap—durable. It is literally sold by the car-load, and yet its almost incredible demand is daily increasing, until there is hardly a country store that does not keep it, or a family that does not use it.

READING MATTER ON EVERY PAGE.

The Conference.

The Congressional Conference is still in session at Meadville. The Conference met at Franklin on the 19th of July, and has consequently consumed sixteen days without effecting a nomination. The situation is precisely the same as described a week ago. The Mercer and Clarion conferees vote alternatly for Mr McAdam and Mr Myers, and the Crawford and Venango delegates vote alternately for their respective candidates

It is becoming seriously a question whether any of the candidates before the Convention can be nominated, but as yet the proposition of a compromise candidate has not been entertained The same unlucky expedient was resorted to a year ago, and its repetition would be dangerous just now

About Collars.

At the recent Sangerbund (German,) festival, at Louisville, we are informed, the singers numbered some two hundred and fifty men, young and old, and upon these two hundred and fifty, there were perhaps five—not over ten, certainly—stand up collars And with one or two exceptions, every man in the room who could grow hair upon his face had it, in some shape and to some extent Sometimes merely a moustache, or a goatee, but generally all the hair that would grow was allowed to grow The effect was good The men had a manly, and yet boyish appearance They all looked young, and to look young, and be young, seems characteristic of the Germans They keep their freshness and perfume of their youth even in the midst of many toils and many years There is something very pleasant in contemplating a nation which is thus always young

Stand up collars, dickeys, or whatever they may call those stiff, straight, upright, strictly linen fixings that used to be worn about the neck were peculiarly English We are glad they are out of date The Tribune of Friday has an article on the manufacture of paper collars, from which we clip the following

Paper collars were first worn by negro minstrels, and the first one of which there is any record, was worn by the venerable "Daddy Rice" one of the fathers of negro minstrelsy who gave up the ghost only a few years since Some enterprising Yankee, seeing them in some public exhibitions conceived the idea of introducing them into private life, and, as usual, his enterprising proclivities succeeded Improvement upon improvement has been made in paper collars, and for each improvement a patent has been obtained These patents, however with one or two exceptions are of no account for the reason that "Daddy Rice" and other minstrels who wore them 25 or 30 years ago had no patent for them and thus anybody was at liberty to wear make, buy, sell, or improve upon the collars thus introduced The "patent" is a dodge, a mere fiction of the trade and is only introduced to deter others from entering on the like business'

Some years ago a man's body was found on a bridge pier in the Thames, London The head had been severed from the body but that portion of the neck which in the live man was buttoned, remained—and the London Times said at once "He was not an English man for he wore a turn down collar" And from that day to the English police have been hunting after a man of men with the turn down collar, and here was confirmation strong as Holy Writ that he was a "foreigner"

Not always did the English people wear stand ups They once delighted to show their necks by the low collar Look at the portraits of Shakspeare, and the worthies who made the Globe famous as the hostelrie of Poets, and the age of the Virgin Queen memorable in literature Their necks were bare, their collars were like the collar ladies wore a few a few years ago—broad flat, and resting on the shoulders Ruffs, bad as they were, ungraceful, stiff, and chevaux de frisig they were not so bad as these stand up collars which the English took to wearing out of compliment to a King or Prince, both of whose necks was unsightly because of disease, Royalty being no exception to the physical punishment attendant on a violation of the seventh of our Ten Commandments How the poor white choked, and he ditkered out fathers went, out of compliment to Royal George and Beau Brummel We have escaped somewhat from the thraldom of those most useless men And the change doubtless is, in a large measure, due to our escape from homage to our departed French Royalty

For once there was a French King, upon whose face no whiskers grew in lushy luxuriance, imperial moustaches, goatee there were none His face was as bald as a moul's crown, or the face of a female beauty—though your brunette often has a faint hint at a moustache upon her upper lip, which looks as if she had been kissed by some one with a corked face, and so the youthful King's courtiers all aped youth Majestic "faces of him" fell before the barbers' razors, and then all Europe shaved For France was the mirror of fashion and the face of man answereth to the countenance of his friend

But we Americans and republicans, owners of the star spangled banner, proprietors of the eagle, followers of freedom, spreaders of the area, and children that have been rocked in the cradle of liberty—we have learned that Nature knew what she was about when she made man bearded like the pard, and woman—

"Smooth and hairless as an egg"

as Robert Herrick poetically described his lady And having learned this we have concluded to let the beards grow The face has become characteristic now, all through the pendant hair, and very few men could now be kissed in the dark without the osculator's discovering the masculinity of the object of his labial adoration And given beards, turn down collars follow as an inevitable consequence, for the stand up collar is a relief by reason of its dainty whiteness to the black or brown or red mass of beard And convenience and innate sense of beauty join at once both satisfied by the beard and turn down collar

To be sure, some prefer the "garrote" collar But the garroted young men indulge in the vanity of whiskers and moustache, cutting the beard from the chin Stand up collars and a full beard cannot well co-exist Either the linen or the hair must "go under"

THE State Baptist Convention will hold its first session in the First Baptist Church, in Erie, Rev Mr Bembridge, Pastor, the third week in October About 400 clergymen will be present The object of the Convention being to form a representative body, which shall hold the same relation to all the Baptists in the State, as each association does to its own members.

THE 59th Annual Fair of the Chautauqua county Agricultural Society occurs on the 11th, 12th and 13th of September.

Boyd "City."

One of the most remarkable features of the oil region is the rapidity with which "cities" spring into existence. In a locality have but a few striking advantages either for striking oil or for transportation, and the magic wand of enterprise transforms it into a city, which like another Jonah's gourd, "vegetates" in a single night

Boyd Farm a few days ago was on the map a miserable and dreary looking flat To day all is live and business activity. The Oil Creek Railroad Company have extended their rails to this point making it the terminus of the route Already the shippers from every section are building platforms there, and of course bring coopers, carpenters, blacksmiths, teamsters, grocers bakers, provision merchants, peanut stands, grog shops, and an endless variety of trades and professions in their train Boyd Farm has already assumed the dignity of a city in name and has been christened Scores of families are preparing to "rough it" in the new city, some in tents some in sheds, some in shanties and to put up with Pithole comforts and conveniences As an illustration of the business in prospect we give the following list of business men who have leased platform ground there Some platforms are already built, others are in course of construction and the balance are preparing to build

R H Bonnifield & Sons Brown, Pettig & Co, (building commission) James H Bunting, A W Coburn, Frank Fowler, J H Fennent & Co Davis & Co Robbins Pettit & Co (commission) H B Cobban D H Cody C J Wheeler & H Abbott Oleophene Oil Company New York Dunham & Co, D Brown & Son Barnum & Black, Parker, Myers & Co, Empire Line, Downer & Co Woods & Wright North Light Company Patterson & Brothers (commission), Milham & Co (commission), J S Crawford, (commission)

This is a good beginning and promises well for prosperous operations On Saturday morning Frank Fowler shipped 500 barrels of oil from his new platform

The Oil Exchange Hotel at the termination of the railroad, is the only public house, and we may say without exaggeration is the finest hotel below Titusville It was completed nearly a year ago in anticipation of the earlier completion of the road, and is now likely to realize the long deferred expectations of its proprietor The Exchange is maintained in very superior style and is worthy the best patronage

STONEHOUSE JACK AND THE EXTRADITION CASE—The action for the extradition of Stonehouse Jack, which was brought the twelfth of June by the Canadian authorities before Commissioner Parker, at Buffalo, for housebreaking at Fort Erie, was brought to a close Friday afternoon by the decision that there was sufficient evidence to hold the accused on a charge of robbery A report of the case with the evidence adduced will be forwarded to the Secretary of State who if he deems the evidence sufficient will issue a warrant surrendering him to the Canadian authorities within sixty days or else he will be entitled to be discharged from arrest

The Buffalo Express says the defence attempted to prove an alibi by several witnesses who swore to having seen him drunk in Buffalo about the time the robbery was perpetrated, but the testimony of Mr Rutherford who knew him was so strong and convincing that credit was given to him without a doubt apparently in the mind of the Commissioner The defendant offered at an early stage of the proceedings to plead guilty to a certain charge, but withdrew it from the Clerk, at the request of the District Attorney Dent which Hamilton stood prepared upon the trial

Bob Vance, alias Stonehouse Jack is a native of Canada and is perhaps twenty or twenty two years of age His father of the Canadian Parliament which position he will not enter since his eyes are gone and his occupation is lost he is prominent while the crooked scenes perpetrately and the head is crowned with the crown like a coronet He is known among the roughs as a flower and his never shown at all is enough His chef d'œuvre is only acquired in Shaffer and Titusville where he was tried for the robbery by the vigilance committee and narrowly escaped from transformed into a gilded Bubble

AFFAIRS AT OIL CITY—The people of Oil City indulged in a celebration the other day over the completion of the iron bridge over Oil Creek A platform was erected at one end of the bridge and music and speeches were the order of the occasion The bridge is of wrought iron in a single span 180 feet in length, and three graduated inches The width is 40 feet Its estimated cost is $60 000

The bridge across the Allegheny River to Venango City is being built with the utmost rapidity, and will be ready for use about the 1st of September should the workmen not be obliged to suspend operations from high water, and against which they have no insurance Should a large rise take place, as is often the case at this season of the year, the company will be put to great expense, and perhaps be obliged to suspend operations till another season The bridge company is a stock association, and if they meet with no sad mishaps, will declare fine dividends at an early day The length of the bridge is about 800 feet, by 30 in width, clear of the foot passages, on each side, of six feet The north end of the bridge strikes a street leading directly into the burnt district, and will be the means of bringing no little amount of trade to that quarter of the borough

THE Farmers' Railroad from Oil City to Petroleum Center is rapidly approaching completion By the first of September, it is thought, trains will run the entire length.

TOM KING, late proprietor of the Fashion, Petroleum Centre, was arrested by the Sheriff of Erie Co., on Thursday last, for biting off a man's ear.

The Foreign Petroleum Markets.

TITUSVILLE, August 4, 1866.

Editors Morning Herald

It has been generally supposed by those who are not well informed as to the foreign petroleum markets that on account of the war in Europe stocks there must be light This is a great mistake, as a simple reference to the export statistics will reveal the fact that European markets have taken from us up to this time five times more petroleum than they did last year It is further more well known that Antwerp has now a stock of about 90,000 barrels against 30,000 same time last year Liverpool, London, Marseilles, Havre, and the German ports show about the same ratio of increase It cannot reasonably be expected, therefore, that our full exports this year will keep pace with that of last year, as the consumption cannot possibly have increased divided With returning peace in Europe our great exports of gold to Europe will materially decrease and with it the premium on the same

With the decrease of the gold premium again the price of all our export articles including petroleum which are sold for currency, must decline to meet the foreign orders which are always limited to a gold price

Speculation may at times run wild and momentarily take the place of the legitimate causes and effects But speculation is a spasmodic irritation which can never last long and must soon make room for the normal condition, and speculation is by no means a normal condition

The present rise in petroleum is not attributable to any natural cause, the production being at least equal to that of last year and the legitimate export demand not much greater

This is sufficiently proved by the fact that the large excess of exports over last year has not gone into consumption, but has accumulated on the different European markets, waiting distribution over the interior

If producers under land their interest they will take advantage of the present rise to dispose of what oil they have, instead of waiting for still higher prices, which may or may not come

One word more with reference to tanking oil and keeping it for a rise.

When oil is very low this may do, but otherwise it will prevent the rise which it is intended to bring about With the present telegraphic facilities the stock of petroleum wheresoever and by whom owned held, will always be known in Europe, and will regulate prices in connection with the demand

The fact of its not being for sale at present will not alter the case as the amount in tanks will absolutely represent the existence of so much petroleum which must sooner or later come on the market The price of petroleum will always regulate itself by the gauge of supply and demand, and not by any artificial means or spasmodic speculations

New Method of Boring Oil Wells.

Every person engaged in the oil business is aware that the present method of boring oil wells is susceptible of great improvement The following description of a new method overcomes many of the difficulties operators have to contend with—hence we publish it for the benefit of parties interested

Last Select a hole is drilled to a suitable depth (this may be done with the ordinary tools) the diameter of which is diminished to about 6½ inches and continued on down the length of the drilling tools when the tools are withdrawn and the well cased with iron inch and a quarter casing (suitable joints) Upon this casing is put a substitute for the ordinary rod being made of sticks of light dry wood of hard pine in side around a short joint of the casing having cleft hand connection The plug is designed when swollen to completely fill the annular space between the casing and the walls of the well Near the top of the casing is an opening through which water can be admitted or let out at pleasure by a rod which is operated in the derrick as it is of course necessary to have a short column of water to run the drilling tools in

After the well is cased the hole is continued on till the oil veins are reached when the well is tubed in the ordinary manner excepting that no seed bag is used and the annular space between the casing and tubing is closed at the top by a gate light cap that performs the double office of supporting the tubing and shutting in the gas, causing the well to flow it oil and gas at pleasure, or gas can be taken to the boiler and used for fuel if desired

The advantages of this method are so numerous at this communication may be too lengthy if I speak of more than two or three of them The first is effectually shutting off the water, so that under no circumstances whatever need the casing be withdrawn except in case of an abandonment of the well is a dry hole or failure to case deep enough to get below the water courses In either event all the casing can be withdrawn by increasing the left hand joint next above the plug except a short piece which can be drilled out in a few hours

Second Doing away with the greatest trouble that operators have namely seed bagging wells with Leather bags filled with flax seed which is the most expensive, uncertain and perplexing of anything connected with testing an oil well, thus saving both time and money The well can be tested at any depth without removing all the tubing

Does Advertising Pay!

From the Pittsburgh Gazette

In a brief interview with one of our most liberal patrons yesterday we enquired of his experience of the policy of advertising We regard his answer as noteworthy, and commend it to the consideration of others

He said the same kind of business in which he is engaged had been carried on at the same stand for ten years by one and nearly ten years by another predecessor That these men gave diligent attention to their business and were sober and honest, but spent nothing for advertising They were barely able to clear living That he had bought the concern ten years ago and has made it for the entire establishment He felt poor and only expended fifty dollars per annum in each of the business papers the first year, that sum equally he increased his expenses to several thousand dollars annually for advertising—and the result has demonstrated its marvelous utility as he is to day worth $177 000 and his annual profits constantly increasing

We know of no instance of failure of any one who advertises freely in order to greatly extend his trade Examples of success resulting from a free use of printing ink in this city are numerous We regret to add that examples of men who are penny wise and pound foolish on this subject are also numerous A little advertising may do but little good—but liberal and liberal advertising has never failed to pay well, sometimes enormously Think of this matter, reader, and follow the line of safe precedents

A DARING robbery was committed near Reno on Wednesday A man named John Luthers was riding on horseback from Franklin to Oil City He had with him about $2,000 in cash When about a mile and a half below Reno he was stopped by three ruffians, beaten until he was senseless, and his money taken from him The men were afterward seen to cross the river in a boat We believe Mr Luthers belonged in Cleveland, and was traveling in the interest of a firm in that city He was taken to Meadville to receive medical treatment

THE CARTER ZOUAVES—The performance in Corinthian Hall on Saturday evening was very largely attended, and the programme arranged for the occasion was rendered as effectively as could be desired The troupe embraces a rare combination of talent, and the juvenile members of the band are very promising Miss Lone is a prodigy in her way, and the infantile phenomenon who toddled in front of the footlights, is certainly the smallest specimen of an American "stager," that ever traveled The Zouave Drill and the Sphynx were very effective, and altogether the performances were highly satisfactory The company will appear for the last time this evening, with a change of programme that will be very inviting to all.

PARKER WELL, TARR FARM, was formerly a good flowing well doing one hundred barrels, but finally got down to a pumping product of three barrels per day About two weeks since one of the Roberts combination torpedoes was exploded at 572 feet below surface After one week spent in cleaning out and pumping it began to flow and has since then steadily yielded one hundred and twenty five barrels per day

No. 33 Benscholf Run, which we alluded to Saturday, is now flowing 200 barrels per day

MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION.—The regular meeting will be held this evening, 8 o'clock, at the Rooms, Waite's block A full attendance is requested, as matters of importance will be considered. F. W. ARMS, Pres't.
C. H. SMITH, Sec'y.

HAIGHT, ARCHER & Co.—Have just received 1,000 barrels of Flour and 10 000 bushels of Oats and have reduced the price of the former $1,00 per barrel and the latter 10c. per bushel.

The Mill Race Bridge.

Editors Morning Herald

I would respectfully call your attention to the manner in which Franklin street is being narrowed to the detriment of its utility as a thoroughfare, and believing the press the guardian of the public good, trust your influence will be used to correct this evil before it proceeds further I allude to the style of bridge now in course of construction over the Mill Race I am informed that it is to be strengthened with trusses, leaving a roadway of but twenty feet, a width liable to prove inconvenient should an object of superior dimensions desire passage

That the difficulty might be obviated by anything of large bulk going three blocks out of its way, is no argument in favor of continuing the present plan to completion Doubtless our efficient City Engineer and Street Commissioner can easily change their plans and furnish us with a bridge which, while possessing the necessary elements of strength and durability, shall at the same time present an unbroken surface and not be an impediment

[The above strictures are just and proper, leaving out of consideration the question of economy But the new structure is certainly an improvement upon the former one, and was designed to meet a public requirement with the least possible expenditure The roadway is broad enough for two teams abreast However objectionable in its general features, the bridge is too nearly completed to admit of any alteration of the original plans—EDS HERALD]

CHEAP, CHEAP, CHEAP!—Haight, Archer & Co have just received $50 000 worth of Groceries purchased at auction during the great slump in New York at ruinously low prices, consisting of Teas Sugars, Coffees Spices, &c, &c, &c, which will be sold by them accordingly, making a deduction from former prices 25 per cent They are also receiving consignments of Flour, Oats and Provisions, which will be sold equally low The prices and quality of their Liquors, Wines and Segars, will bear examination and pay for calling before purchasing elsewhere The attention of the Retailing and Jobbing community is solicited HAIGHT, ARCHER & Co

NEW YORK, August 4.

The Post's money article says The gold market declined this morning, notwithstanding coin is scarce for delivery, loans being made at 1 per cent in favor of the lender

Money continues superabundant and Stock Exchange loans are generally made at 4 per cent No change in discounts.

The stock market opened steady and rather dull. Government securities were firmer at 145 The quotations were N Y Central 104¼, Erie 68¾, Hudson 1 2, Illinois Central 122

The Commercial's money article says The tone of the stock market continues, There is little confidence among the large operators to sell and realize profits and for the moment this tendency prevails over the necessity to buy The railroad list was generally ½ ¾ of 1 per cent lower

The European steamers to day took out $408,000 The total amount shipped for the week, $511 049

No dispatches have been received this morning by the Atlantic cable

It was reported late yesterday in the street in Exchange Place that received an hour's dispatch reporting the conclusion of peace, a reduction of the Bank of England rate to 8 per cent, and a decline of middling uplands to 15d and 5-20s at 69

TITUSVILLE August 4

The petroleum market continues to have some material change to record to day some of the producers, anticipating and speculation sold their oil with difficulty at $3 12½, but the generality of them were holding at a price far beyond the reach of ordinary shippers The prevailing impression appears to be that there is nothing more at present than there was one month ago to promote an active demand and the consequent distribution of consumption in the market Interested by better news from Europe and the scarcity of suitable packages for storing the oil

The tank car operators have flooded the Eastern markets with high gravity oil, for which there is little if any demand, and have driven hundreds of coopers from their business of barrel making Now it has been and doubtless is proved that there is a large amount of oil on hand but no barrels suitable for moving it Hence the price of oil from 40 to 45 degrees gravity in prime barrels has advanced, showing that it is the price of barrels more than that of oil which has advanced Large operators, taking advantage of this circumstance, have conserved the market to suit their purposes This has become daily more apparent from the frequency of the telegrams and the absence of demand for foreign export It is owing to the danger of a reaction taking place at any moment that several of the producers are offered to sell short It was rumored this evening that a large producer had ordered to sell a little short at $3 at the wells, to be delivered within 10 days at his option, and that he failed to effect a sale This shows the prevailing want of confidence in the present rise being maintained

PITTSBURGH August 4

CRUDE—There was a brisk inquiry for crude this forenoon and higher figures were offered but sellers were hard to operate with They had to wait and hold on demand prices up to 3 or per cent in order to obtain all they wanted to meet a legitimate trade demand There is no crude here unsold, and contracts for future delivery could not be effected Well run of 15 barrels is offered for that water in Clarion A 2 cent to buy transactions were out of the question, sellers not knowing what to sell at Buyers being unable to get in the commodity even at a material advance

At Petroleum Centre crude to day was reported held at 3 per barrel with plenty of buyers from East and West

The Oil City market was wild and quotations cannot be hardly given.

[illegible] in 1791, and was the first Presbyterian minister ever seen there. His leader of the [illegible] was a certain Jim Davis, a noted gambler of the day, whose moral character was not [illegible]. He applied to Father [illegible] to baptize his infant child, thinking, as [illegible] the father, there would be no objection to [illegible] the child. Father Hyde refused on the ground that [illegible] was not a Christian. Jim became quite indignant. When church time came on, he repeated to some the refusal, and spoke so the congregation could hear him, that he would "neither worship nor sing for a man who would refuse to baptize the bairn, because the dad wasna great [illegible]."

—A Boston gentleman, now in Paris, gives the following amusing description of the style and head-dress adopted by the women of the French capital: "The shape of bonnets now in vogue in Paris is diamond form, about three inches square, from two corners of which hang ribbons of an enormous width, (about six to eight inches, I judge). The addition of a hen or a canvas back duck, perched on the diamond, gives it a very elaborate appearance. But, if the bonnets look alike, the waterfall rendered the equilibrium. These are made of three French rolls, covered with horse hair, and tied on the back of the head, the centre leaf should be of larger size than the upper and lower. Altogether, they would appear most ridiculous on any one but a French woman."

—Gottschalk meets with great success in Peru, and has received a new decoration there, in the shape of a gold scantlun leaf ornamented with gold and diamonds and surrounded by the symbols of music.

—"I am glad this coffee don't owe me anything," said a book-keeper to his wife the other morning at breakfast. "Why so?" was the response. "Because I don't believe it would ever settle."

—It is rumored that the file-grinders of Sheffield talk of "striking" for an increase of wages. It is to be hoped that the organ-grinders will follow suit.

—An accident occurred at St Louis, recently, which has exploded a theory that has been held immutable for many years. During a heavy thunder-storm in that city, Angela Arata, while lying on a feather bed, entirely insulated from any other material substance, was struck by lightning and instantly killed.

—Sam Slick tells us if he were asked what death he preferred, as being most independent, he would answer, freezing, because he would then go off with a "stiff upper lip."

—George Francis Train goes in for the Philadelphia Convention. Stephen H. Branch is understood to support it. We have not yet heard from Daniel Pratt, Jr.

—The Lafayette Journal learns of a Teutonic individual in that city who threw himself outside of eighty-seven glasses of beer and two glasses of whisky in one day. After performing the feat he dryly remarked that he "could hav' taken a great deal more but did not feel particularly thirsty that day."

—A colored waiter, named Benjamin, died in a singular manner, in New Haven, Connecticut, on Thursday last. He had a troublesome corn on one of his feet, to which he applied one of those advertised "infallible salves" and some turpentine. The result was inflammation of the leg, followed by amputation and death in a few hours afterwards.

—A trial has been made at Florence of a cuirass in aluminum, which is as light as an ordinary waistcoat, nearly as flexible, and capable of turning a musket ball fired at the distance of thirty-eight paces, and of resisting a bayonet thrust from the heaviest hand. Each cuirass costs only twenty five francs. Two Italian regiments are, it is said, to be immediately provided with them.

—Edwin Forrest is going to venture a few performances in England, after he closes his present engagement in California. The undertaking is a little risky, in view of the Macready riots in New York some years ago, when the favorite English tragedian fled for his life from before the assault of Forrest's friends.
